- a. 13%
- b. 7%
- c. 49%
- d. 80%

Check your answer on the bottom.

Now That's an Idea!

Your help can make a difference! If you think your friend or loved one may be depressed, here's how you can help:

- Learn more about depression, don't make assumptions.
- Encourage them to make a doctor's appointment.
- Give emotional support.
- Encourage them to stick with their treatment plan.
- Invite them to join you in activities they used to enjoy.
- Don't expect too much too soon.
- Model positive behaviors and lifestyle choices.
- Take comments about suicide very seriously!

Answer: The correct answer is D. According to the National Institute of Health, 80 percent of people who are treated for depression show improvement in just four to six weeks.

Know it!

Knowing about depression can help you get the right treatment to beat it.

Depression is a medical illness that requires treatment like any other chronic health problem. When a person is depressed, their ability to function is affected.

Depression causes people to lose pleasure in their daily life, can complicate other medical conditions and, in extreme cases, can lead to suicide. Yet depression often goes untreated because some people see it as a personal weakness and believe they can just get over it.

Many factors can contribute to depression:

- Too little or too much of certain brain chemicals.
- Low self-esteem or negative thinking.
- Having an illness, such as heart disease or cancer.
- A depressive side effect of medications.
- A family history of depression.
- Difficult life events, such as divorce or the death of a loved one.

Symptoms of depression include:

- Persistent sadness or anxiety.
- Too much or too little sleep.
- Increased/reduced appetite, unusual weight gain/loss.
- Loss of pleasure in activities once enjoyed.
- Restlessness, irritability.
- Physical symptoms that do not respond to treatment (such as chronic pain or digestive disorders).
- Difficulty concentrating, remembering or making decisions.
- Fatigue or loss of energy.
- Feeling guilty, hopeless or worthless.
- Thoughts of suicide or death.

If you have five or more of these symptoms for two weeks or more, you should consider talking to your doctor or call your program for help.

Take an active role in beating depression so you can enjoy your life and time with loved ones.
You can talk with a counselor right now, confidentially, by calling your program.

Treat it!

Treatment for depression works. Treatment can help you enjoy your favorite activities again, be more productive, reconnect with friends and family and feel more comfortable in social situations.

The most common treatments for depression are antidepressant medicines, psychotherapy (talk therapy) or a combination of these. Better nutrition and exercise are typically stressed as part of any treatment plan.

You and your doctor or counselor will work together to find what treatment is best for you based on things like:

- Severity of your depression.
- Cost of treatment.
- Possible side effects of any medicines you are taking or other medical problems

Beat it!

Staying healthy and happy may mean making lifestyle changes so you can cope with depression. Try these tips:

- Simplify your life. Cut back on obligations and set reasonable goals.
- Write in a journal. Journaling allows you to express emotions.
- Read self-help books. Ask your doctor for recommendations.
- Join a support group. Connecting with others facing similar challenges can help.
- Don't become isolated. Try to participate in social activities.
- Take care of yourself. Eat a healthy diet, exercise regularly and get plenty of sleep.
- Learn ways to relax and manage your stress. Why not try meditation, yoga or tai chi?
- Avoid making major decisions. When you feel depressed, you may not be thinking as clearly as you should.
